No one can write a book like this alone, especially under the extraordinary circumstances of the past few years, which have involved a change in administrations and a seemingly constant deluge of announcements and policy changes targeting asylum seekers and, on a personal level, the addition of two family members – my daughter Emery and my dog Snoop.

First and foremost, I want to thank my amazing husband, Justin, whose constant love, patience, and support sustains me and makes my work possible. Without his daily encouragement and partnership in raising our daughter Emery and taking care of our dog Snoop, all while managing his own incredibly demanding career, I simply could not have produced this book. I also want to thank Emery, Snoop, and my sister Kacy for making me laugh and being my daily rays of sunshine; without them, the darkness of the current administration's actions toward asylum seekers could have been all consuming.

I could not have taken on this massive project without the backing of my partner, Ava Benach, and the dedicated staff of Benach Collopy LLP. Ava's steadfast support throughout this process, as I juggled our busy practice with my writing, was a gift of true respect and trust. I could not ask for a better partner. I also want to thank our staff, in particular Satsita Muradova, Sarah Pitney, and Liana Montecinos, who provided me with incredible support and ensured that all of our clients continued to receive the impeccable service that they deserve.

My heartfelt thanks go out to Danielle Polen and Sarah Redzic, my publishers and editors at AILA, who brainstormed and commiserated with me, and supervised the editing and publication of this book. Their guidance, patience, and dedication were essential to producing the best possible resource for advocates representing asylum seekers. I also want to thank Mary Johnson, Associate Director of Marketing & Business Development, for her artistic talents and creative marketing, as well as the staff and leadership at AILA National, including Grace Woods, Robert Deasy, and Benjamin Johnson, who deeply believe in educating and supporting our current and future AILA members and demonstrate their commitment to these values through their publication of tools like the Primer.

Given the complexities of U.S. asylum law and procedure, I placed great importance on identifying other experienced practitioners in the field who could review and contribute to my work. There is no doubt in my mind that the Primer is a better tool and a more comprehensive guide because of the following experts, who I am also fortunate to call my friends: Blaine Bookey, Christina Brown, Charles Shane Ellison, Alice Farmer, Lisa Green, Ilana Greenstein, Lindsay Harris, Brian Hoffman, Ashley Huebner, Lindsay Jenkins, Hiroko Kusuda, Michelle Mendez, Victoria Neilson, Paul O'Dwyer, Chuck Roth, Rebecca Scholtz, Rekha Sharma-Crawford, Shoba Sivaprasad Wadhia, Sheila Starkey Hahn, and Ben Winograd. These talented and tireless advocates donated their time to contribute their big brains, huge hearts, and many years of experience to each chapter of the Primer.

This book could not have been completed without the invaluable assistance of several enthusiastic and hard-working law students who will soon be incredible lawyers, including: Sesia Cruz, Virginia Giannini, Christian Jorgensen, Allison Mandeville, Caitlin Morrell, Milena Okorie, and Olesya Rosner. These students, in particular Virginia Giannini and Milena Okorie, who spent several months and countless hours working with me on the Primer, made important contributions to this resource by cite-checking and researching complex legal issues. It is my hope that these talented students join and continue to contribute to our field of immigration law.

I would also like to thank the late, great Michael Maggio, who despite his busy immigration practice, always found time to contribute to our field as a policy and media advocate, a pro bono champion, and a mentor. I have strived to use Michael's well-rounded approach to our work as a model for making my own contributions to our field and followed this approach in my vision for the Primer.

Last, but certainly not least, I would like to thank my family for their lifetime of encouragement, constancy, and love, in particular my mom, Deb, who makes this world a better place through her daily acts of kindness; my stepdad, Dave, who demonstrates that with hard work and determination, you can accomplish anything; and my dad, Dean, who taught me that everyone, no matter their background, deserves the chance to pursue their dreams.
