

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

Although this book bears my name, there are many people whose support, encouragement, and criticism contributed to the final work. This book could not have been written without the encouragement and support of my family. My wife, Magda Montiel Davis, who is the finest nonfiction writer and poet I know, encouraged and ultimately convinced me that this book was worth publishing. My children, Kathryn, Paula, Maggie, Sadie, and Benjamin, were an inspiration to me during the long and seemingly endless nights that I drafted and redrafted this book. I am also blessed with seven beautiful grandchildren who have enriched all of our lives. My brothers, Mitchell, Jerold, and Marvin, have always encouraged me in my work and that encouragement has always been appreciated. I lost my brother Mitch this past year. He had a copy of almost every edition and was proud to show it to everyone who walked into his office. I miss him.

This book had the benefit of being reviewed and critiqued by some of the best legal minds in the immigration field. None of my colleagues can be criticized, however, for any of the shortcomings of this book, but they deserve to share whatever praise the book may engender. I was fortunate to have my colleagues review various chapters of this book over a number of editions: James David Acoba, Karena Acree-Paez, Matt Adams, Khaled Alrabe, Deborah Anker, Robert Aronson, Ahilan Arulanantham, Carmen Arce, Peter Ashman, Lauren Aucoin, Roxana Bacon, Elizabeth Badger, Maria Baldini-Potermin, Rodney Barker, Elizabeth Bedient, Lenni Benson, Anna Benvenue, Naveen Rahman Bhora, Sylvia Boecker, Richard Boswell, Barbara Brandes, Tanya Broder, Jan Brown, Matthew Carlson, Florence Chamberlin, Henry Chang, Rex Chen, Sui Chung, Steven A. Teran, my partner Helena Tetzeli, Stacy Tolchin, Roger Tsai, Marc Van Der Hout, Manuel D. Vargas, Carola Villavicencio, Andrew Wachtenheim, Abigail Walsh, Nathan Waxman, Cletus Weber, Anthony Weigel, Beth Werlin, Nadine Wettstein, Charles Wheeler, Isaac Wheeler, Crystal Williams, Emma Winger, Ben Winograd, Bernard Wolfsdorf, Marianne Yang, Palma Yanni, Sejal Zota, Paul Zulkie, and Keren Zwick. Their comments were invaluable and their graciousness in extending their valuable time strengthened the book immeasurably.

I am also indebted to the members of the National Immigration Project of the National Lawyers Guild for their cooperation and assistance in supporting and producing the book. I owe a special debt of gratitude to Dan Kesselbrenner for shepherding this book through the most critical stages of the publication process.

I also owe a special debt of gratitude to the University of Miami School of Law for their financial support in providing law students to work with me on the first draft of this book. The assistance of Barbara Kamali, and especially Mario Lovo, who checked and rechecked and commented on drafts of this work made the First Edition possible. I am deeply appreciative of the work of my student, Raquel M. Chaviano, of Nova Southeastern Law School, who provided extensive help on the Sixth Edition of this book and to Matthew Carlson, Alejandra Arroyave, Elena Ionita, and Dr. Kathryn Davis for their assistance on the Eighth Edition. The Ninth Edition of the book benefited greatly from the help of Catherine Reynolds, who checked and rechecked every single citation in the book. This incredible undertaking was done by Catherine with good cheer and in the most professional and scholarly manner. I also could not have completed the Ninth Edition without the help of Alejandra Arroyave, Eric Nierenberg, Cristina Jimenez, David Kim, my partner John Pratt, and Krista Teibel, who worked tirelessly in the daunting task of creating an index that was not computer generated. The Tenth Edition could not have been completed without the help of numerous comments from my colleagues around the country and from the work of the lawyers and law clerks in my office who worked day and night over holiday weekends to complete the book. Special thanks go to Professor Geoffrey Hoffman, my partner John Pratt, Anne Janet De Asses, Mark Gardberg, Vanessa Paz, Andrea Martini, Lacy Brinson, Paul Schwartz, Michael Almonte, and Nicolas Chancy. For the Twelfth Edition, I was fortunate to have help on the index from my partner John Pratt, from the immigration attorneys in my office—Carmen Arce, Lacy Brinson, Andrea Martini, Sasha Westerman Keuning, and Heather Roberts—and from my dear friend and colleague Florence Zolin Chamberlin, whose dedication and competence is matched only by her sweet and caring nature. The Thirteenth Edition was again assisted by the lawyers in my office—John Pratt, Chris Rickerd, Jessenia Concepcion and David Echeverry—and a host of family, friends and colleagues—Geoffrey Hoffman, Florence Chamberlain, Andrea Martini, Trina Realmuto, Nadine Wettstein, Heather Majam, and Stephanie Browning—who were kind enough to pitch-in and get the index completed. The Fourteenth, Fifteenth, and Sixteenth Editions were no exception but the list of names of all those who help to index the book has grown too long to list here, so please accept my apologies and my appreciation.

I would also like to thank my young friend and colleague Charles Wheeler, who is one of the very best immigration lawyers I know. His knowledge of the field, particularly family-based immigration, is without parallel, and he has been kind enough to let me borrow some examples from his book on the Child Status Protection Act, which I incorporated into the Fifteenth and Sixteenth Editions.

The Florida Bar and Matthew Bender also deserve recognition for their agreement to permit me to reprint, in a substantially expanded form for the First Edition, chapters 4 and 10 respectively. In addition, the National Immigration Law Center was kind enough to permit me to copy their chart on Eligibility for Public Benefits, which has been incorporated as Appendix F. The last several editions also benefited greatly from the technical assistance of Ken Schleimer. Leslie Share of Packman, Newell & Rosenberg of Miami, has graciously allowed me to reprint a chart he created of countries that have tax treaties with the United States as Appendix G. A special debt of gratitude goes to my dear friend and colleague Carmen DiPlacido, who passed away before the Fourteenth Edition was completed. Carmen was the kindest and one of the greatest scholars of naturalization law in the country, and the set of charts on citizenship and naturalization in the Appendix to this book was his idea and creation. I will miss Carmen terribly as will all who knew him. I'd also like to thank Jennie Guilfoyle, who kindly took up the challenge to edit and expand Carmen's work in this edition.

For the Eleventh, Twelfth, and Thirteen editions, I had had the benefit of a brilliant young lawyer, Betsy Lawrence, who carefully edited every chapter of the book. Our goal always has been to maintain the book in one volume, and Betsy's efforts, in those three editions, made that possible. She also has worked tirelessly on every other aspect of the book, including the index, and her intelligence and stamina are remarkable.

I owe a special debt of gratitude to two colleagues who are good friends: Amy Novick and Randy Auerbach. Amy Novick worked on the first nine editions of this book and she is largely responsible for its success. Her literary and organizational skills are unrivaled and she is primarily responsible for the concept, design, and idea behind the sourcebook. Randy Auerbach is unique. His literary skills, his professionalism, his patience, his wit, and his command of the Queen's English never cease to amaze me. I am extremely fortunate to have him as an editor and friend. Each time we work together on a new edition, I am awed by his stamina, his deep understanding of all aspects of publishing and law, and his patience in dealing with an author who complains too much and too often. Thank you for making the book a professional work that is a source of pride to me and to all our readers. This is his tenth edition with me and although the odds of rolling a 10 are only 8.3 percent, he is one of a kind. I could not imagine doing this book without him.

In addition, I also want to thank the professional staff at AILA— particularly Mary Johnson, Danielle Polen, Sarah Redzic, Rachael Pulda, and Robert Bequeaith—who have spent countless hours promoting, and providing support for this book. And, I am fortunate enough to still have Tatia Gordon-Troy's leadership, good cheer, strong support, and wisdom. My heartfelt appreciation also goes to Ben Johnson and Torey Carter-Conneen for seeing the big picture, and to Robert E. Juceam for being such a wise and good friend all of these many years.

Thank you all.
